All 2012/13 figures in this report are from April 1 2012 to March 31 2013, unless specified otherwise. Consistent job definitions are used across the Hand in Hand Group, based on ILO (International Labour Organization) standards.
A new wind is blowing through the world of international development and it is called job creation. First the World Bank issued a flagship report, simply called “Jobs”, and in May 2013, the UN’s High Level Panel report on the post-2015 Development Agenda put jobs firmly at the top of the international development agenda.

From Hand in Hand’s perspective, this interest is long overdue. We have already mobilized one million people, mainly poor women, into entrepreneurship. These women have started or developed more than a million small businesses, generating about 1.5 million jobs. Our long term goal is to generate 10 million sustainable jobs that will lift some 50 million family members out of poverty by 2020.

My own engagement with Hand in Hand started 13 years ago, when I realized that what keeps people poor is that they cannot earn a living. In many developing countries, 50% or more of the population are unemployed or underemployed. That is why job creation is so critical. Raising family income contributes to greater food security, better healthcare, housing and education; for instance, Hand in Hand (HiH) India has brought over 200,000 former child workers into school.

The Hand in Hand group’s results last year speak for themselves: almost 200,000 new entrepreneurs trained and 150,000 small businesses developed. The HiH India team led by Kalpana Sankar has continued to deliver impressively, expanding into central and northern India and piloting programs in South-East Asia. We have also seen good progress in East and Southern Africa, as well as in Afghanistan, despite the very difficult environment there.

I want to thank our board members, 5,000 employees and 50,000 volunteers for their great contributions. And I want to thank our donors and other supporters around the world. The results we have achieved would not have been possible without you.

Percy Barnevik
Chairman
In the past year, 180,000 people joined a self-help group somewhere in the Hand in Hand network – almost 500 a day. Over 95% of them are women. The resulting 146,000 businesses and 228,000 jobs benefitted over 1.1 million marginalized people.

To put this in context, Hand in Hand is supporting almost as many new family businesses as are being registered in the entire formal private sector of the countries we operate in.

Hand in Hand was originally founded in India and HiH India still generated the bulk of this year’s results. Job creation programs by Hand in Hand operations in the six other countries are growing rapidly – particularly in sub-Saharan Africa.

These successful programs are supported by funds raised by HiH International. During this financial year HiH International raised just under US$ 6m. This was achieved against a global backdrop of declining donations – internationally there was a real drop of 4% in official development aid* and a record 20% fall in UK charitable donations by individuals during 2012.

Finance is vital if we are to reach our ambitious target of 10 million jobs by 2020. However, funding alone will not achieve this goal. Part of our job at HiH International is to support rapid global expansion while continuing to maximize the impact of every dollar donated. As well as continuing to support the existing Hand in Hand operations, we plan to scale up job creation rapidly and effectively by cooperating with partners which already have capacity on the ground and complementary expertise. HiH India and HiH Eastern Africa have started to engage in strategic partnerships in Cambodia and Rwanda respectively. Looking ahead, we are exploring further partnerships in other countries.

2. BUILDING A BASE OF COMMITTED DONORS

The international fundraising environment has been challenging. None the less, thanks to the generosity of our donors, HiH International raised US$ 5.8m during 2012/13. We are grateful for the loyalty of our donors from both public and private sectors.

As well as opening up new sources of funding this year from private philanthropists and foundations, we are pleased that donors such as the Stichting af Jochnick Foundation, the Swedish International Development Cooperation Agency (Sida) and the Johnson & Johnson Corporate Citizenship Trust have continued their support.

“Even the largest of companies start off small, often with the support of a loan to help bring to life an inspired idea. We believe that an organization which gives the poorest and most marginalized in society an opportunity to increase family income by starting a small business, is a natural partner for the Johnson & Johnson Corporate Citizenship Trust.”

Frank Welvaert, Managing Director, the Johnson & Johnson Corporate Citizenship Trust
“My decision to support Hand in Hand was inspired by its unremitting focus on creating businesses and jobs and the multiplier effect this has on the aspirations, the well-being, the future of families and of entire communities.”

Martin Wiwen-Nilsson, Partner, Goldman Sachs

“The Postcode Lottery supports organizations and programs which make a sustainable difference to people’s lives. The Hand in Hand business creation model has a proven track record of enabling some of the poorest and most marginalized in Asia and sub-Saharan Africa to set up businesses and lift their families out of poverty.”

Marieke van Schaik, Managing Director, Dutch Postcode Lottery

“We have supported Hand in Hand for a number of years and have found that Hand in Hand’s cost effective, businesslike approach combined with its specialized job creation model helps deliver sustainable results.”

Anders Rönquist, Head, Development Cooperation Embassy of Sweden in Nairobi
3. STAYING LEAN IN THE GLOBAL DOWNTURN

Our donors rightly expect that overheads are minimized versus funds going to programs and that expectation is even higher in a global downturn. HiH International’s lean operating model means that this year’s ratio of fundraising and administration costs to expenditure (FACE ratio) was kept to 9%. We are committed to keeping our FACE ratio among the lowest in class but still sufficient to raise funds effectively and provide sustainable support to the Hand in Hand group.

The clarity of the Hand in Hand approach also renders it highly cost-effective, as it is relatively easy to replicate in different national contexts. The cost to create one sustainable job across the Hand in Hand group this year varied from US$ 20 in southern India to US$ 225 in Afghanistan (reflecting the difficult conditions due to on-going security threats). On average, enabling a long-lasting job costs the Hand in Hand group only US$ 55, which compares favorably to other initiatives which train the poor to become entrepreneurs.

A study published in 2012 by the Institute for the Study of Labor found that the cost to train an individual alone - not the cost per job - ranges from US$ 21 to US$ 400 in other programs.
4. FUNDING OPERATIONS, CHANGING LIVES

HiH International funds operations in Asia (Afghanistan, Cambodia, India and Myanmar) and sub-Saharan Africa (Kenya, Lesotho, Rwanda, South Africa, Swaziland and Zimbabwe).
Bhanumathi used to supplement the family income by making and selling coconut fiber mats. However, this side activity became their only source of income when illness forced her husband to close his welding business three years ago. Overnight their income fell from 7,000 Indian Rupees (US$ 121) to INR 3,000 (US$ 52) per month.

In desperation, Bhanumathi tried to increase the rate of production of her mats but, with little education and no knowledge of how to run a business, she ended up making a loss.

It was not until she joined a self-help group that Bhanumathi learned how to successfully expand her business and turn it into a gainful enterprise. Today, Bhanumathi provides jobs for ten local women and receives bulk orders from wholesalers throughout the region. The business makes a net profit of some INR 9,000 (US$ 156) per month.
Gul Hussain joined the local Hand in Hand self-help group because he needed to increase his family income. His regular wheat crop was not bringing in enough income to provide for him and his family.

With HiH Afghanistan he not only learned how to maximize the return on his wheat crop, but also how to farm more profitable crops such as strawberries.

His initial investment in just 400 strawberry plants yielded a strawberry crop which he sold for a net profit of Afghani 4,800 (US$ 87), increasing his total income by almost one third.

He now plans to invest the profits in more strawberry plants and reach out to bigger markets in the area.
Totally reliant on the income from her husband’s job, Alice Kakuvi found they could not afford the books and uniforms their three children needed for school. In an area with few regular jobs available, Alice decided to create an income for herself by starting her own business. HiH Eastern Africa staff encouraged her to put a little money aside on a regular basis and taught her basic business skills.

Alice started her own grocery business which, today, brings in Kenyan Shilling 3,000 (US$ 35) per month. This now enables her to send the children to school. She has also invested some of her earnings in a goat to farm or sell, if the family has a sudden financial crisis.
Unemployment in the village of Upper Makhuzeni in South Africa is high and just getting by is a struggle for many families. Even maintaining a roof over their heads used to be difficult because the expensive bricks and other raw materials could only be bought in the distant local town.

With mentoring by HiH Southern Africa, a group of five neighbors, led by Nombuso Ngubo, teamed up to establish the region’s first business manufacturing bricks.

Together, the members of the Sukuma Cooperative saved enough money to invest in the necessary raw materials and machinery. Now they make 450 bricks a day which are sold locally for 5 Rand (R) each (US$ 0.6), generating a weekly turnover of R 13,500 (US$ 1,350).

HiH Southern Africa is continuing to mentor the group as they reinvest some of their profits in a storage facility.
SCALING UP

To meet our long term goal of creating 10 million jobs by 2020, organic expansion of the existing network will not be sufficient. We estimate 3.5 million jobs will need to come from new Hand in Hand operations and new strategic partnerships in additional countries.

Working with these new implementing partners will allow us to accelerate growth and learn from others. Hand in Hand will engage with strategic partners who share our values and are willing to embrace our model of job creation at the bottom of the pyramid.

Our priority will be South East Asia and sub-Saharan Africa. Despite a decade of rapid economic growth, the latter remains the poorest continent, with a young and fast-growing population; by 2020, Africa is predicted to have added 220 million people to its labor force, most of them poor and many only educated to primary level. Hand in Hand’s approach to training and financing micro-entrepreneurs can generate some of the employment so urgently needed on the continent.

This strategic expansion is already underway. This year, HiH International funded HiH India to take the first steps to expand in South Asia by collaborating with local NGOs in Cambodia and Myanmar.

In March 2013, we also signed an agreement for HiH Eastern Africa and CARE Rwanda to collaborate. Together, they will empower 100,000 Rwandans – mostly women – to work their way out of extreme poverty by starting and running their own businesses and creating 80,000 sustainable jobs within three years.

BOOSTING CREDIT ACCESS

In 2013 we will launch an impact investment fund offering philanthropists the opportunity to provide loans, not grants, to Hand in Hand micro-entrepreneurs for the first time. Hand in Hand will raise Kenyan Shilling (KES) 250 million (US$ 3m) in loan capital for the Enterprise Incubation Fund (EIF). A US$ 100,000 equivalent investment in the EIF will support the creation of 11,500 jobs, helping to lift over 57,000 adults and children out of poverty. The fund will pay a fixed 2% annual interest in KES over five years.

Access to credit is essential for micro-entrepreneurs to grow their businesses beyond subsistence levels and achieve a secure income. Yet, many of them do not have the credit record necessary, or are unable to meet the terms offered by microfinance organizations. They need start-up capital to bridge to these institutions.

To accelerate business creation, HiH Eastern Africa will therefore begin providing micro-loans. The capital raised will revolve many times over five years, allowing micro-loans to be issued to up to 100,000 poor Kenyans. These micro-loans will only be open to individuals trained by Hand in Hand Eastern Africa to set up and run a business. The EIF is planned to expand later to Afghanistan and Southern Africa.
Entrepreneurs are at the heart of Hand in Hand’s model. The Social Entrepreneurship Program grew from our desire to share in leading academic research and learn from the experience of others advancing the role of entrepreneurs in development.

The Social Entrepreneurship Program (SEP) is a five-day interactive course, initiated by Hand in Hand and consultancy Socient Associates and taught by Professor Rangan of Harvard Business School. The course showcases the role of social entrepreneurs in reducing poverty.

One of only a few courses of its type in the world, the SEP attracts people from over 30 countries and a wide range of backgrounds, spanning micro-finance, social entrepreneurship, philanthropy and academia.

In 2012 the course was co-hosted in Kenya with HiH Eastern Africa. In 2013, its third year, the SEP will move to Rustenburg near Johannesburg, in South Africa, co-hosted with HiH Southern Africa.
